He sharply criticised the methods of exhibiting the works of famous sculptors in modern museuma The criticism was meted out without stint to even our leading institutions, like the Metropolitan Museum of Art, while the Louvre in Paris was given similar treatment. He quoted Rodin to the effeet that "shadows in sculpture are nest; of beauty" and explained how poor lighting destroyed the works of the masters and ruined marbles as well as casts for either appreciation or study. He was particularly critical of the placing and lighting of the famous Venus de Milo statue in the Louvre, saying that it has for all these years been exhibited under ditions entirely different from those which the sculpter chose.

Art That Cost $100,000 Fetches $6,253 at Sale

Bought on Advice of a Friend Go Cheaply.

A good sized audience assembled in the Anderson Galleries last night to see the pictures of the late John T. Milliken of St. Louis sold at auction. Mr. Mil- that of Brigadier-General. He was reliken acquired his pictures upon the advice of a friend in Paris, who, it is said, has since disappeared, and paid, it is also said, $100,000 for them. Last night they brought $6,263.

Mr. Milliken never saw the pictures.

They arrived in this country after his death, and it is now impossible to know why he bought without examination so large a collection of supposedly impor-tant pictures. They belonged originally to a Mr. Henry Bare, a retired business man of Lille, France. The Anderson Galleries in the catalogue of the sale stated that "possibly a few were genu-ine examples by the masters" whose names were signed to them, which in-dicated to the public that caution was ecessary in buying.

The cautious buyers were for the most part dealers. Among the principal sales were: No. 47, Harvest Scene, by Vey-rasset, to Mr. Bowles for $72.50; No. 68, Road to a Village at Sunset, Rousseau, to R. Vitello, 185; No. 80, Portrait of a Man, School of David, Satinover Galleries, $50; No. 110, Tree Trunks, Rousseau, to Weston Galleries, $125; No. 6, Oriental Scene, De Beaulieu, to D.
